This volume concentrates on the relation between these two fields and asks how electrical action potentials facilitate secretion of substances from nerve cells which control endocrine events. While stimulus-secretion coupling has been studied extensively in other physiological contexts, this is the first treatment of the phenomenon in an exclusively neuroendocrine setting.

Neuroendocrine systems have been important to our understanding of many basic principles in neuroscience and physiology, for instance, our understanding of stimulus-secretion coupling. The origins and significance of patterning in neuroendocrine secretion are still dominant themes in neuroendocrinology today.

Stimulus-secretion coupling in hormone secreting cells is a complex system of pathways that link activation of cellular processes by i.e. nutrients to the release of hormone. Stimulus-secretion coupling in the insulin secreting beta-cell is intensely researched to improve our understanding of type 2 diabetes (T2D), a perpetually growing global pandemic.

The effectiveness of ATP to interfere with parameters of stimulus-secretion coupling is markedly reduced at low extracellular Ca²⁺ concentration. Conclusion: It is suggested that extracellular ATP which is co-secreted with insulin in a pulsatile manner during glucose-stimulated exocytosis provides a negative feedback signal driving β -cell oscillations in co-operation with Ca²⁺ and other ...
